Lafayette Stimulates the Downtown

Lafayette has not been as badly impacted by foreclosures and declining property tax revenues as other cities. But the City has over the last few months lost some important businesses, including the Hungry Hunter, Keenan Heinz, and Hollywood Video. These business departures mean less sales tax revenue for Lafayette and so, in an effort to invigorate the local economy, the Lafayette City Council recently approved a stimulus package aimed at encouraging downtown business and development. The package, which remains in effect through 2009, includes the following items:

- Fees for sign permits will be waived. This should encourage businesses to spruce up their storefronts and eliminate visual clutter, making the downtown more inviting for shoppers.
- The City will cover the cost for sidewalk improvements and street trees required as a condition of development.
- Recognizing that development in both the downtown and in residential districts may be stalled due to cash flow or credit availability problems, all land use permits that would have expired between February 23rd and the end of the year will automatically be extended for one additional year. This will give applicants some leeway to put together workable financing packages.
- The waste management security fee will be waived. Businesses and homeowners in the midst of renovation or building are typically required to deposit money as security that the contractor will properly dispose of debris. Recognizing that this requires cash and could stall development, the City will waive the security fee (but still, of course, monitor the disposal).
- Typically, if a tenant whose use no longer conforms to the City’s zoning requirements shuts down, the landowner has 120 days to replace the space with the same use. If the deadline is not met, any new tenant needs to conform to the zoning requirements. Under the stimulus plan, however, the City will give landowners more time to replace vacant properties with the prior non-conforming uses. This should help landowners find new businesses to occupy the vacant storefronts, stimulate commercial activity in the downtown, and increase sales tax revenues.

While the cost of this stimulus package is nowhere near the $800 billion spent by the Federal government, it might help developers with their improvement plans, keep the downtown lively during this difficult economic cycle, and allow for recovery to happen more quickly once the economy improves.

Think Globally, Shop Locally

In December, the Lafayette Chamber of Commerce launched a campaign to remind residents to “TRY LAFAYETTE FIRST!” when buying gifts, hiring services, and dining out. So far, the response has been outstanding; we’ve heard dozens of stories from residents who decided to patronize a local merchant rather than making purchases online or out of town.

Why does it make sense to “TRY LAFAYETTE FIRST!”?

- Lafayette keeps 1% of the sales tax paid within the City. These sales taxes support many public services including public safety, road repair and park maintenance.
- Local businesses are the largest employer nationwide, hiring primarily local residents including high schoolers and senior citizens.
- Local business owners often live in our community and are invested in the community’s future.
- Local merchants provide greater customer service and may have a higher level of expertise about their products and services.
- Local shopping requires less transportation. Because Lafayette merchants are right here in town, residents save on gas and parking while reducing their carbon footprint.
- Local businesses provide the distinctive character and culture our community enjoys, and successful local businesses attract more of the same.
- Local businesses support local nonprofits.

Join the others who have taken the pledge to “TRY LAFAYETTE FIRST!” by visiting the Lafayette Chamber of Commerce website at www.lafayettechamber.org. By taking the pledge you’re eligible to win $500 in local gift certificates and services.

As a thank you to Lafayette residents who help keep local merchants in the black by shopping locally, the Chamber is throwing a community BBQ on Friday, June 5th between 5:00–8:00pm at Plaza Park (corner of Mt. Diablo Blvd. & Moraga Rd.). Come meet local merchants, business owners and neighbors and enjoy free food, music and good times.

Just a reminder that, in addition to putting on the annual Art & Wine Festival and the Reservoir Run, the Chamber is a great community resource for businesses and residents alike. Need information about local schools, a recommendation on a good painter or where to buy running shoes? Need a place to hold a meeting? A map of the area? The Chamber has it! The Lafayette Chamber of Commerce is located at 100 Lafayette Circle, #103 and can be reached at 925-284-7404.
